COUNTERFEITER'S TRICKS.

Bogus Money and the Ways, New and Old, for Shoving

A Merchant Taken in by a Supposed Drunken Man and a Broken Glass.

Dishonest Merchants Swindle Themselves in the Effort to Over-Reach Make-Believe Inebriates.

Several merchants sat chatting around a table at Delmonico's the other night and table at Delmonico's the other night and their conversation drifted upon counterfeit money, and the methods, new and old, which those who "shove the queer," as the rogues say, have of imposing upon their rickets between all points on their line at one and one-fifth fare for the round trip. He was inclined to be impertinent, however and said we'd better send for a policeman, as he'd like nothing send for a policeman, as he'd like nothing better than a term on the island, now that cold weather was coming on. I said I did not care a rap what became of him; what I wanted was pay for my broken class. He was been class. He wanted was pay for my broken glass. He declared he had not a cent in the world, at the same time turning his trousers pockets inside out to show how empty they were. I noticed that he buttoned up his coat, however, in a suspicious manner, and something ever, in a suspicious manner, and something street.

about him gave me the impression that he was lying.

"What have you got in your waisteoat pocket," I said, "turn them out, too," "I hain" got no money, I tell you," he replied, angrily, as he tried to jerk away from the two clerks who were holding him. "Send for a cop, I say," he added, "that's all you're a right to do. You hain't got no night to search my pockets and take my money; besides, I hain't got none."

"By this time I felt sure he had some, and, as having him locked up for disorderly condact was not going to do me any good and was evidently just the thing he wanted, I resolved to disappoint him. So I began to go through his waisteoat pockets, and in a little one inside, in the lining, what should I find but an old $20 bill. The tramp set up a howl of rage and imprecation when I took the bill and gave him back eight big gilver dollars, but we fired him out of the shop and he disappeared down the street.

"When my bookkeeper took that bill with the rest of the day's receipts over to the bank that afternoon it was promptly returned to him as a dangerous countarfet. Imagine my disgust and how my clerks grinned. And I don't even believe I could prosecute the rascal, for he certainly made no attempt to pass the money on me. In fact, I passed it on myself.

"Well, that is a pretty good joke on you, old man," said another of the party, "and I never heard of that particular trick before, though it somewhat resembles one that is played now amd again on merchinuts who are suspected of being dishonest. I saw it dome myself once, in a store where I was calling to sell goods in the days when I was a drammer. A drunken man came along, as in your case, between daylight and dark, just before the lamps, kerosene in those days, were lighted. He bought some tobacco, and then began a slow and lumbering search tyrough his pockets for change. From one he puiled and the merchant became impatient.

"Give me the bill, then," he said testily.

that the merchant became impatient.

"'Give me the bill, then,' he said testily.

'I'll change it for you.'

"'Sh'my lash two dollar,' biccoughed the inebriate, 'and don't want schanger.'

"'All right,' snapped the merchant, as he grabbed the parcel of tobacco from the man's feeble grasp; and threw it back into to drawer with a bang, 'when you find your change let me know, and I'll give you the parcel. I con't wait all day on you.'

"'Now, don't get 'xcited, ol' fel.,' said the man, 'take the bill. Shmy lash two dollar, but take it.' and he threw down on the counter a bill that you could see plainly, even in the dim light of the store, was a 'V.'

The crafty merchant saw the mistake in a jiffy and looked at me sharply out of the corner of his eye. I thought it was none of my business anyway and pretended not to have noticed anything. So old skinflint swept the bill into his drawer, made change for two dollars, and got his bibulous customer out of the store as quickly as possible.

"The next time he went to the cash drawer, after the lamps were lit, how he did swear! He was so mad he forgot his own duplicity and gave himself away. The bill was a 'V,' to be sure, but so bad a counterfeit that if he had taken time to examine it, and had not been in such a hurry to get it out of sight, he would have spotted it in an
